

Bell companies should have to accommodate other ISP firms that wish to purchase access from them. There is already excess capacity in the lines so I don't see why requiring small companies to create their own infrastructure would be beneficial, or constitute good business sense. Instead wholesale provisioning stimulates benefits consumers and encourages entry into the market. Chairman Powell: Please do not allow big business to cripple competition and the small businesses of our country.